I had had a chance to visit Alex Davis' World History I 5th period today. I enjoyed the activities she had planned around Islam. She mastered the use of the 30 minutes we had (special schedule) with a variety of interactive partner activities. I think I will steal her acrostic poem idea. It was really effect how she gave time limits to the activities to encourage her 9th graders to work efficiently and effectively on the themes. And for someone with 4 preps, I got a nice organizational tip for moving back and for between all the courses.

If you are looking for some effective ways to use the longer period, I would ask Alex if you can visit to see what she does.

Dear Alex,

I wanted to thank you for allowing me to observe class the other day. It was a wonderful opportunity to see you and Deb collaborate and bring both Sophomores and Freshman together to exchange ideas. They were all so enthusiastic and engaged, and the group activity was definitely fun for them.

I can tell your students enjoy working with you and that they respect you very much. It was great to see that they feel comfortable working alone and that they can hold their own working with the sophomores. Their was such a positive feeling in the room and they were so enjoying doing the work. it was a delight to see you teach.

Well done!

Thank you so much for taking a day to shadow a student. I know that you learned a lot and gained perspective. I appreciate you sharing your insights with me and I look forward to our group meeting in March to debrief.

On "Freedom Friday," Alex gives students choices to demonstrate their knowledge in creative and critical ways. She presents a trio of choices which all involve critical reading of both the curriculum and relevant present day choices (a mix-tape for the Han Empire, a recipe representing the Hellenistic period). Students were excited, engaged, and actively involved in their learning. Student choice, modern-day relevance, creative (and critical) thinking. That's an excellent trifecta.
